"Say, Ollie!" cried Henery Hawk as he spied his friend dashing across the school grounds, a large sheaf of paper clutched in his hand. "What's all the rush?"

"The big basketball game between our school and Crosstown High, of course!" called Ollie over his shoulder.

"But that isn't until this afternoon!" exclaimed Henery. "I still don't see why you're in such a hurry!"

Ollie finally came to a reluctant halt and glared at Henery in exasperation. "In case you hadn't noticed," he explained, pointing to a card stuck in the brim of the jaunty red cap he wore, "this card says 'Press'—and that means that I am the reporter for our school newspaper, the Weekly Warble—and that also means," he continued, once more preparing to dash hurriedly off, "that I'm going to cover that basketball game this afternoon."

"But I still—" protested Henery, a vaguely puzzled expression on his face as he trotted along at his friend's side.

"Well, naturally I must do a bit of research on the subject," replied Ollie as he headed for the school library. "A thorough review of the history of the sport, a study of the manufacture of basketballs, a survey of the history of balls in general. . . . Why, this," he went on with mounting enthusiasm, "may take me back to the ancient Egyptians!"

"Gosh, Ollie," ventured Henery, following the excited little owl into the library. "I've always wanted to be a reporter, myself, but I never thought you'd have to do all that! Don't you think that people just want to read what—"

"Who cares what they want to read?"

asked Ollie with a stern glance in Henery's direction. "It's what they ought to read that counts! Now, if you really want to learn how to be a great reporter," he went on, quickly selecting several fat volumes from the library shelves, "just help me with this background material, and I'll really show you the ropes!"

When the two little friends finally arrived breathlessly at the press box, it was just in time for the game to begin.

"I can't wait to get back to the office," confided Ollie in a loud whisper. "When they see how my article is just loaded with all this grand information about rubber balls, beach balls, and croquet balls—why, I wouldn't be a bit surprised if they nominated me for the Pulitzer Prize for distinguished journalism!"

Throughout the game Ollie riffled repeatedly through his voluminous notes, crossing out some and rewording others. When the game was finally over Ollie and Henery dashed across the school grounds, arriving triumphantly at the Weekly Warble office.

"Do I have a wonderful story on the basketball game, boss!" cried Ollie, waving his notes gaily in the air. "Just wait till I type these up and—"

"Swell!" exclaimed the editor from his desk. "Who won?"

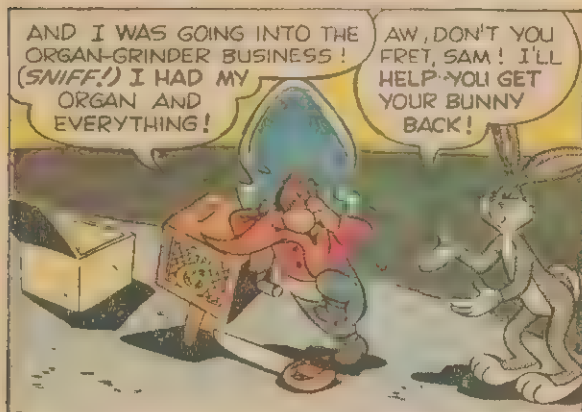

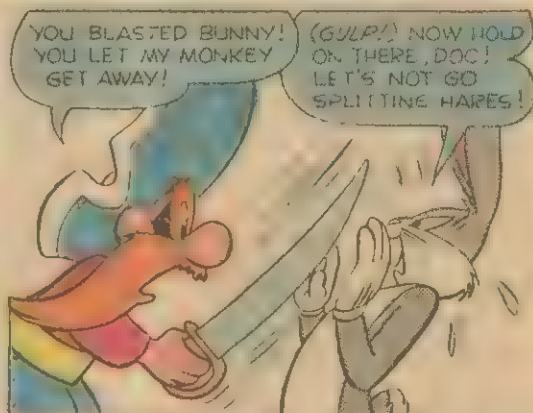

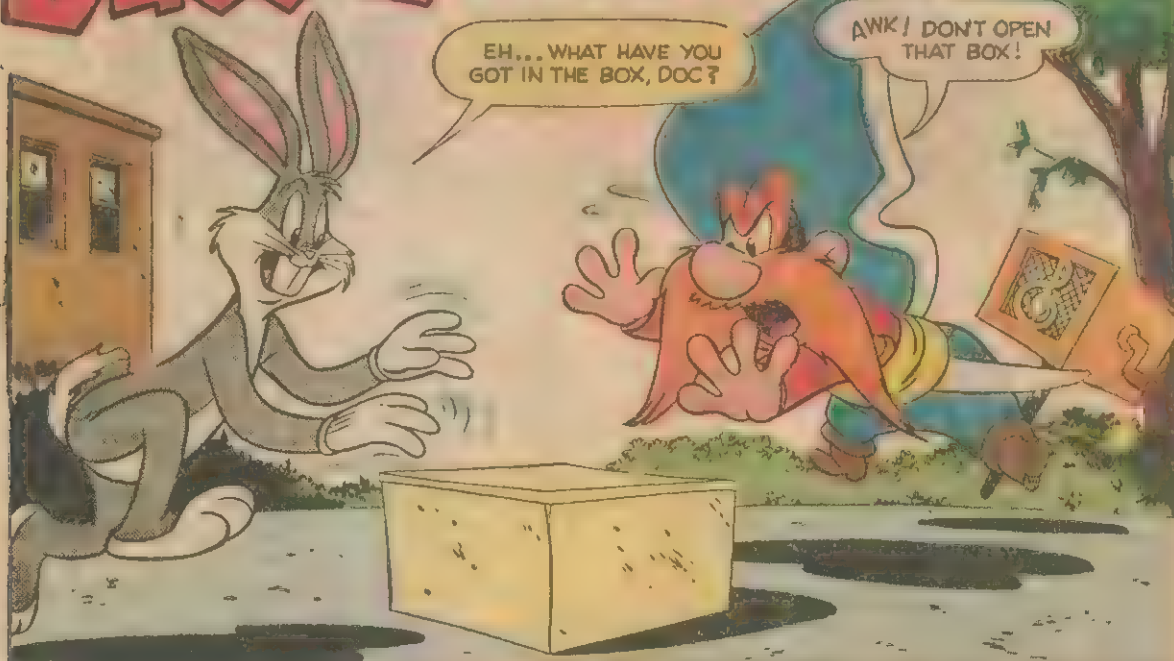

"Why—er—that is, I—" began Ollie, popping his mouth open and closed like a surprised goldfish.

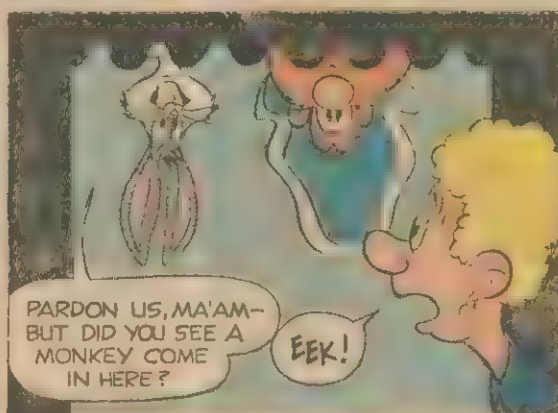

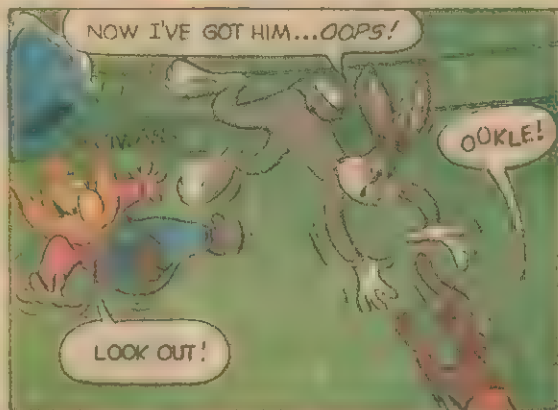

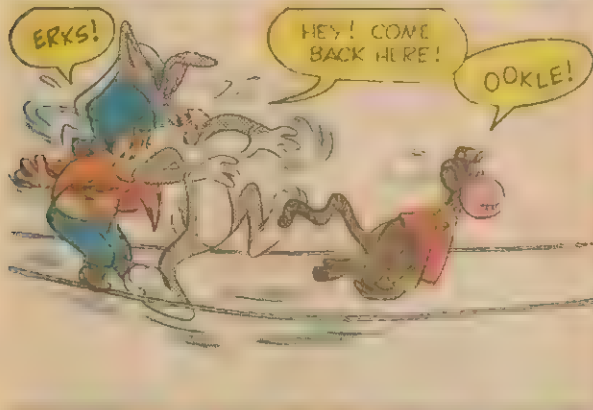

"We did—98 to 73," interrupted Henery as he handed the wide-eyed Ollie a small scrap of paper with the score. "Ollie was teaching me how to be a reporter, too," he explained with a wink, "and he left those unimportant details up to me!"

PREHISTORIA

CAVE PAINTINGS

Among Man's earliest records are the prehistoric paintings found on the walls in an ancient cave at Lascaux, France. The paintings picture horses, bison and other beasts. Some are shown pierced by spears. It is believed that the pictures were painted as part of a ritual to bring success in the hunt. Other caves have pictures of sorcerers dressed in animal skins and wearing antlers or horns. The sorcerers are shown performing ritual dances and other rites of magic designed to bring good fortune in the next hunt. Primitive tribes practice such Stone Age magic in remote corners of the world to this very day.

Prehistoric paints were compounded out of powdered clay and other colored minerals which were mixed with animal fats. Colors were probably applied with sticks.

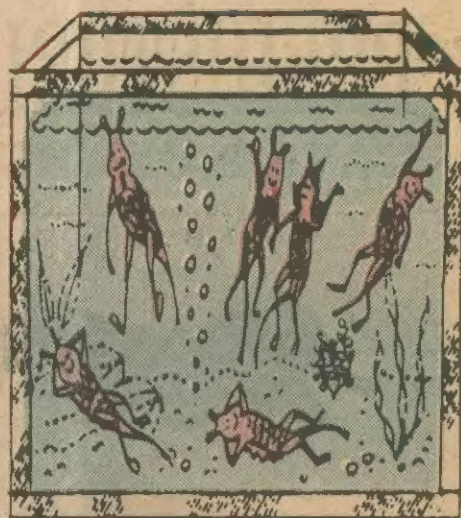

Cave paintings include pictures of the hands of prehistoric hunters, stencilled in red, black and yellow.
